Teaching science variables can be tricky! This lesson is the solution! I have included a foldable note page for interactive notebooks, a variable reading passage, practice pages in both full page size and interactive notebook size and an assessment. Students will practice identifying independent, dependent, and controlled variables in science scenarios, testable questions, and hypotheses. Check out the Preview Above for a Closer Look!Contents include:pg 1-3 Cover, preview, TOUppg 4-5 Notes foldabPage 2 Use this activity to tackle common misconceptions and elicit discussion surrounding controlled variable investigationsControlled variable investigations are a key part of 11-14 curriculums. Students learn about the different types of variables and how to control them, as well how they affect the validity, repeatability and reproducibility of an experiment. Written practical reports are a useful way of having students show they really understand the differences between the variables, the importance of controls and the need to be explicit in how they are controlled. One quick and easy way to do this is with so-called 'wrong reports', where a 'student' has made some mistakes in their planning or write up. Give each pupil a copy of the wrong report worksheet and ask them to identify and correct the errors. This wrong report focuses on an experiment investigating how long different types of sugar take to dissolve. This activity will get your students thinking about how important controlled variables are to an investigation and you can use the answers to open up a class discussion of key points, for example how 'fair test' is shorthand for 'a well-controlled investigation'. Find more tips for teaching this topic to your younger students in the Education in Chemistry article How to teach controlled variable investigations at 11-14. Coloring pages have recently become a huge hit all over the world. In my new series of word wall coloring pages, you can bring the excitement of coloring into your middle school and high school science classrooms.This set includes the words: hypothesis, experiment, constant, variable, data, research, qualitative, quantitative, and scientific investigation.Word Walls are an instructional tool used primarily in the elementary classroom. While teaching in Texas, my administrators decided they wantedPage 2This is a brief review sheet that can be printed and distributed to students. It covers all of the steps of the scientific method and some aspects of measurement. problem, hypothesis, question, prediction, variable, conclusion, research, data, measurement, procedure, experimentPage 3In this lab, students will be responsible for going through each step of the scientific method. During the lab, they will collect information on coins: mass and volume, then calculate densities. They even have to perform the experiment three times to ensure data accuracy. Further, follow-up questions and puzzles help to reinforce concepts behind the scientific method, variables, mass, volume, and density.
